Fork Property

In the summer of 2008, three people flew to the site in float-equipped aircraft to prospect on foot from a temporary dome-tent camp for less than a week. There is no work planned for the upcoming year due to the economic climate. No wildlife was encountered and the time on-site was extremely limited also negating the environmental impact of the exploration work. No site visit by Land Use inspectors was conducted. One small greywater sump and one small pit toilet were backfilled (treated with lime in the case of the toilet) and the land returned to its original contours. No materials were left on-site. No diesel or jet-fuel was on site, and no there were no spills of any sort. There were no helicopter touch-downs and the float-plane did only one trip in to drop off the crew and one trip to pick them up. Below are photos of the camp before and after occupation.
