Explanatory notes

Definitions

Direct impact measures the initial requirements for an extra dollar's worth of output of a given industry. The direct impact on the output of an industry is a one dollar change in output to meet the change of one dollar in final demand. Associated with this change, there will also be direct impacts on GDP, jobs, and imports.

Indirect impact measures the changes due to inter-industry purchases as they respond to the new demands of the directly affected industries. This includes all the chain reaction of output up the production stream since each of the products purchased will require, in turn, the production of various

Induced impact measures the changes in the production of goods and services in response to consumer expenditures induced by households' incomes (i.e., wages) generated by the production of the direct and indirect requirements.

Total impact in open model is equal to the sum of the direct and indirect impacts.

Total impact in closed model is equal to the sum of the direct, indirect and induced impacts.

Simple multipliers capture the sum of direct and indirect impacts. They are based on the assumption that households are exogenous and that there is no feedback between wages and production.

Simple multiplier = (direct + indirect impacts) / $1 exogenous final demand

Total multipliers capture the sum of direct, indirect and induced impacts. Households are treated as endogenous and the payments for labour services, i.e. wages, are redirected in the economy through consumer expenditures.

Total multiplier = (direct + indirect + induced impacts) / $1 exogenous final demand

Type I and Type II multipliers express respectively the simple and total multipliers as a multiple of the direct impacts.

Type I = simple multiplier (direct + indirect) / direct impacts

Type II = total multiplier (direct + indirect + induced) / direct impact

For example, the simple jobs multipliers show the direct and indirect impacts on jobs of one dollar's worth of output of a given industry while the type I jobs multipliers show the direct and indirect impact on jobs of one job in a given industry. In including the induced impacts, the same idea holds for the total and type II multipliers.

Assumptions and interpretation

The input-output model is based on the assumption of fixed technological coefficients. It does not take into account economies of scale, constraint capacities, technological change, externalities, or price changes. This makes impact analysis less accurate for long term and large impacts as firms adjust their production technology and the IO technological coefficients become outdated. Assuming that firms adjust their production technology over time to become more efficient implies that the impact of a change in final demand will tend to be overestimated .

The endogenization of household consumption is based on the assumptions of constant consumption behaviour and fixed expenditure shares relative to incomes.

It is generally acknowledged that the open model underestimate economic impacts since households activity is absent and the closed model overestimate economic impacts because of the rigid assumptions about labour incomes and consumer spending. They can be considered as upper and lower bounds of impact.

Full-time equivalence and number of jobs

Two types of jobs impacts and multipliers are available: one for the total number of jobs and another which transforms the former into a full-time-equivalent (FTE) number of jobs. The estimate of the total number of jobs covers two main categories: employee jobs and self-employed jobs (including persons working in a family business without pay). The total number of jobs includes full-time, part-time, and temporary jobs. It does not take into account the number of hours worked per employee. FTE jobs include both the employee and self-employed jobs but the FTE transformation only applies to employee jobs. The transformation is based on the overall average full-time hours worked in the business and government sectors.

Industrial classification and sectoring in the input-output accounts

Following the structure of the Input-Output tables, the industries are organized according to three broad sectors of the economy: the business, government, and non-profit institutions serving households (NPISH) sectors. The business sector is disaggregated by industry according to the North American Industrial Classification System (NAICS). The NPISH sector is disaggregated into the few industries where its activities are concentrated and a large aggregation of residual industries. The government sector, however, is disaggregated, not by industry, but by broad functions, such as education, health, recreation, public administration, etc. Activities of government business enterprises operating for a profit are classified to the business sector industries. However, agencies, commissions, and boards financed from public funds are classified to the government sector. This approach leads to differences from the non-sectored industrial classifications used by other programs in Statistics Canada.

The wholesale and trade industries

The wholesale and retail industries in the IO accounts are not shown as consumers and producers of commodities in which they deal; rather, their outputs are defined as the gross margins on goods (sales less cost of goods sold), and their inputs are defined accordingly as expenses less cost of goods purchased for resale. Accordingly, the IO multipliers for these industries are applicable to their gross trade margins and not their total sales.

Explanatory notes

Definitions

Direct impact measures the initial requirements for an extra dollar's worth of output of a given industry. The direct impact on the output of an industry is a one dollar change in output to meet the change of one dollar in final demand. Associated with this change, there will also be direct impacts on GDP, jobs, and imports.

Indirect impact measures the changes due to inter-industry purchases as they respond to the new demands of the directly affected industries. This includes all the chain reaction of output up the production stream since each of the products purchased will require, in turn, the production of various

Induced impact measures the changes in the production of goods and services in response to consumer expenditures induced by households' incomes (i.e., wages) generated by the production of the direct and indirect requirements.

Total impact in open model is equal to the sum of the direct and indirect impacts.

Total impact in closed model is equal to the sum of the direct, indirect and induced impacts.

Simple multipliers capture the sum of direct and indirect impacts. They are based on the assumption that households are exogenous and that there is no feedback between wages and production.

Simple multiplier = (direct + indirect impacts) / $1 exogenous final demand

Total multipliers capture the sum of direct, indirect and induced impacts. Households are treated as endogenous and the payments for labour services, i.e. wages, are redirected in the economy through consumer expenditures.

Total multiplier = (direct + indirect + induced impacts) / $1 exogenous final demand

Type I and Type II multipliers express respectively the simple and total multipliers as a multiple of the direct impacts.

Type I = simple multiplier (direct + indirect) / direct impacts

Type II = total multiplier (direct + indirect + induced) / direct impact

For example, the simple jobs multipliers show the direct and indirect impacts on jobs of one dollar's worth of output of a given industry while the type I jobs multipliers show the direct and indirect impact on jobs of one job in a given industry. In including the induced impacts, the same idea holds for the total and type II multipliers.

Assumptions and interpretation

The input-output model is based on the assumption of fixed technological coefficients. It does not take into account economies of scale, constraint capacities, technological change, externalities, or price changes. This makes impact analysis less accurate for long term and large impacts as firms adjust their production technology and the IO technological coefficients become outdated. Assuming that firms adjust their production technology over time to become more efficient implies that the impact of a change in final demand will tend to be overestimated .

The endogenization of household consumption is based on the assumptions of constant consumption behaviour and fixed expenditure shares relative to incomes.

It is generally acknowledged that the open model underestimate economic impacts since households activity is absent and the closed model overestimate economic impacts because of the rigid assumptions about labour incomes and consumer spending. They can be considered as upper and lower bounds of impact.

Full-time equivalence and number of jobs

Two types of jobs impacts and multipliers are available: one for the total number of jobs and another which transforms the former into a full-time-equivalent (FTE) number of jobs. The estimate of the total number of jobs covers two main categories: employee jobs and self-employed jobs (including persons working in a family business without pay). The total number of jobs includes full-time, part-time, and temporary jobs. It does not take into account the number of hours worked per employee. FTE jobs include both the employee and self-employed jobs but the FTE transformation only applies to employee jobs. The transformation is based on the overall average full-time hours worked in the business and government sectors.

Industrial classification and sectoring in the input-output accounts

Following the structure of the Input-Output tables, the industries are organized according to three broad sectors of the economy: the business, government, and non-profit institutions serving households (NPISH) sectors. The business sector is disaggregated by industry according to the North American Industrial Classification System (NAICS). The NPISH sector is disaggregated into the few industries where its activities are concentrated and a large aggregation of residual industries. The government sector, however, is disaggregated, not by industry, but by broad functions, such as education, health, recreation, public administration, etc. Activities of government business enterprises operating for a profit are classified to the business sector industries. However, agencies, commissions, and boards financed from public funds are classified to the government sector. This approach leads to differences from the non-sectored industrial classifications used by other programs in Statistics Canada.

The wholesale and trade industries

The wholesale and retail industries in the IO accounts are not shown as consumers and producers of commodities in which they deal; rather, their outputs are defined as the gross margins on goods (sales less cost of goods sold), and their inputs are defined accordingly as expenses less cost of goods purchased for resale. Accordingly, the IO multipliers for these industries are applicable to their gross trade margins and not their total sales.
