To whom it may concern,

We are Silverback Films, a UK-based natural history television company. Last summer, we filmed on the Fosheim Peninsula on Ellesmere Island for a major television streaming service, documenting the lives of Arctic wolves and their pups in this unique environment. Our experienced crew captured the natural behaviour of the wolves, their interactions with prey species, and the broader ecological context of the region.

Following the success of our initial expedition, we are seeking permission to return for a second and final year. Our aim is to continue documenting the story of these wolves, focusing on how they adapt to ongoing environmental changes and the challenges they face. The upcoming shoot will be similar in scope and logistics to our previous visit, with a small, low-impact tented camp established on Crown lands as our operational base. As before, the exact camp location will depend on the wolves' den site, which we will determine during a recce at the start of our filming window.

We have already secured the necessary permissions for our previous summer's work and are in the process of updating our applications with the relevant authorities for this follow-up expedition. We are committed to minimizing our impact on the land and wildlife, and we are happy to provide further details or updates as needed to support our application.

Thank you for considering our request to return and continue this important natural history project.

If there is any more information I can provide to support our application, please do let me know.

Many thanks
Peter Lytle
